

Vader

Vader is a 13 year old RETIRED sled dog. He is NOT looking for a working home. He is just the sweetest boy and absolutely LOVES being close to his people. He's good with older kids and most medium/large dogs, but does have a tendency to fight certain male dogs, so a home where he is the only one would be preferable. I've never had him around any little dogs or cats so I'm not sure how he would react to them. During the times I've had him in the house he's been well behaved (doesn't jump on the counters etc) and has never had an accident, I do have to admit though, I've never left him inside unsupervised or for extended periods of time so I'm unsure how he would behave in these situations. I should also say he is a LARGE dog, bigger than most sled dogs I've seen. I think he would do best in a quieter home where he has a fenced yard (he doesn't climb my 3 ft fence) and another large female dog or older kids to play with, preferably somewhere more secluded where there isn't a lot of traffic.

Elvis

Handsome 15 year old male, he is a big big boy, more like a malamute than a husky. He's good in a crate and doesn't mess in the house. Sweet sweet dog, he prefers women and can be somewhat fearful of men but will warm up with time. No kids, cats, or male dogs. He's just looking for a quiet place to live out his last few years. I love love love this dog and am happy to keep him if the perfect home can't be found.

Ares & Apollo

Ares and Apollo have been together since birth and I would really like it if they could stay that way. They will be two years in May and are both fairly small, at most 40 pounds. Their mother is a purebred Siberian Husky and their father is unknown. They're both good off leash and really like hiking and exploring new places. I've only had them in harness a handful of times each and although they've done well I can't guarantee their abilities as working dogs. They've done alright with my cats in the past and have a little experience with kids and seemed friendly, but I'd like them to be around kids a bit more before saying they'd do good with them. These two have very little experience with being inside and are not house broken or crate trained. I believe they'd do best with an active family as pets and potentially skijor partners. I would also like to add that their coats are completely different in summer vs winter and that they do require a lot of maintenance, and that they will not sleep in houses if they are left outside, they do not like them.

Artemis

This spunky little girl is friendly with nearly every dog she meets. She is absolutely tiny and definitely needs a pet home. She is 50% Siberian Husky 50% Mystery Mutt. Artemis is super sweet and has a pretty soft personality, she's not great off leash but she hasn't ever bolted away from me, she actually heals pretty well but can get distracted easily. She's been around cats a little bit but is mostly afraid of them, although she may warm up to a particular cat over time. I don't think she'd do well with small children as she can be a bit pushy sometimes. Her personality reminds me more of a pitbull than a husky to be honest and with how short and blocky she is I believe she has some in her.
